

Elections 2008: what's at stake for women?

Join the women who are making a difference during this critical election year. The National Council for Research on Women is holding its annual conference June 5-7 at New York University. It will bring together experts, scholars and leaders from across the country in a series of events that look beyond the headlines into the realities of women today.

What: NCRW Annual Conference 2008

Where: The Kimmel Center, NYU

When: June 5-7, 2008

What are women saying about the 2008 Elections? How will they vote in November? Is there a gender versus race divide or is it all about class? How can more women get into the board rooms and halls of decision-making in greater numbers? What are the special challenges faced by immigrant women? What kind of health care reform is needed? How are women affected by the current financial crisis and economic slowdown?

These questions and more under-reported issues will be probed during this unique assembly of thought leaders, researchers and activists. Don't Miss It!

For details or accreditation, contact Vivienne Heston-Demirel, Director of Communications at the National Council for Research on Women, tel: 212 785 7335, ext. 201, email: vheston-demirel@ncrw.org, or visit our website: www.ncrw.org.